We thank you for collaborating with us on this important study of wellbeing at work. This comprehensive survey of wellbeing is just the first step in what we hope will be a long and mutually-beneficial partnership between the Wellbeing at Work/Flourishing in Ministry team and The Christian Reformed Church in North America.

This report provides a summary of the information we collected in the survey of the wellbeing of members in your organization or network. Most importantly, it provides a comprehensive assessment of members' wellbeing.

We break wellbeing into two core components and assess each component with a battery of measures. The first component is daily wellbeing, or what scientists sometimes refer to as happiness. This captures the quality of our daily lives, our experiences of burnout, and our capacities to be resilient in the face of stressors and challenges. We used the following battery of measures to assess daily wellbeing:

- Person-work fit
- Satisfaction with Work Life
- Job satisfaction
- Burnout
- Resilience
- Satisfaction with life
- General Happiness
- Experienced stress

The second component of wellbeing is flourishing. Researchers are still searching for more precise answers to what flourishing is, but there is strong consensus that it includes at least four elements: (1) an overarching system of beliefs, values and virtues that provides structure and guidance to life (meaning system), (2) a sense of contributing toward important purposes or goals in life (purpose in life), (3) an experience of being positively connected to others in mutually caring relationships (positive connectedness), and (4) a positive self-concept and a sense of being one’s true self (positive identity & authenticity).
INTRODUCTION

We used the following battery of measures to assess flourishing:

- Authenticity at work
- Job Engagement
- Thriving
- Quality of social support and relationships
- Spiritual wellbeing
- Work-family balance
- Work as a calling

We also collected data about some personal factors that are directly related to wellbeing. These personal factors are related to individuals' sense of self-worth and their capacities to adapt and deal with challenges, stressors, and change. We used the following battery of measures to assess personal factors:

- Emotion regulation
- Proactivity
- Self-control
- Financial worries
- Core self-evaluations

Each of these measures is described in more detail in the report and in the Measure Definition Section. You may also find more information about our research on these dimensions of wellbeing at our project websites: wellbeing.nd.edu and flourishing.nd.edu.

Additional Analyses

In the weeks and months ahead the research team will conduct additional analyses of this survey data. These analyses will break down the data, where possible, by age group, work tenure, race and ethnicity, and other important demographic comparisons. We will also analyze the relationships among wellbeing factors. For example, we will analyze how personal factors such as core self-evaluations and emotion regulation are related to the different components and measures of wellbeing. We will provide these reports to you as soon as they are completed.
Continuing Our Collaboration

There are several ways we can continue to support your efforts and to foster wellbeing among the members of your organization. Individuals may return to their account on our website and update their wellbeing profile. They will be able to track changes in their wellbeing and continue to receive insights from our research to help them. When a sufficient number of members of your organization have updated their wellbeing profiles, we can provide updated reports such as this one to your organization.

In 2017, we will launch a smart device app that will track the daily ebbs and flows of wellbeing. This app can be downloaded to smart phones and tablet devices. It will provide a way for individuals to learn about the factors in their daily life that foster or diminish their wellbeing. Many individuals are unaware of the true nature of the stressors at work nor do they often understand the positive and life-enriching aspects of work. This app will provide a scientific way for them to gain personal insights into their work experiences.

That app will help us to learn a lot more about the daily hassles, stressors, and uplifts that shape wellbeing. When sufficient members participate, data from this app will also provide benefits for organizations. For example, it can create a platform for assessing the effectiveness of new wellbeing programs and initiatives.

We will also launch thematic surveys that focus in greater depth on specific topics such as work-family life, work and non-work relationships, and characteristics of work contexts. We will notify your organization as each of these thematic surveys are available, and we can invite all of the individuals who have participated in this baseline survey to join the new thematic surveys. We will provide comprehensive reports to your organization for each of these thematic surveys.

We look forward to our continued collaboration as we work together to support and enhance the wellbeing of caring and helping professionals.
Our Research Project

The Wellbeing at Work Program (WAWP) is a team of researchers who are exploring what makes work a life-enriching versus life-depleting experience. We focus on the helping and caring professions. Our goal is to learn how to help these individuals flourish in the important work they do. The WAWP has three key elements:

- Flourishing in Ministry is our research on the wellbeing of clergy. We study the lives and ministries of women and men in Christian ministry spanning Roman Catholic, Mainline, Evangelical, and Historically Black religious traditions.

- Caring for Caregivers is our research on international humanitarian and global health professionals. We travel around the globe to study wellbeing in action among the men and women who serve poor, vulnerable, and marginalized people.

- WorkWell is the practice-oriented part of the Wellbeing at Work Program. Here, we strive to provide research-based insights and tools that organizations, leaders and helping professionals can put to good use in their daily work lives.
The Wellbeing Survey

This report is part of collaborations between The Christian Reformed Church in North America and the University of Notre Dame Wellbeing at Work Research Project, the Lilly Foundation and Templeton Religion Trust. The purpose of this project is to learn more about the well-being of the Christian Reformed Church in North America pastors and ministers.

We asked a variety of questions about both life in general, as well as life at work. The results of the survey are not intended to be exhaustive. We hope this report provides an overview of what it means to flourish and sacrifice.

Our survey questions are research-based and include questions about life satisfaction, self-evaluation, social support, resilience, and faith.
MEASURE DEFINITIONS

DAILY WELLBEING MEASURES

- Fit
  - A measure of the respondent’s knowledge, skills, and abilities to successfully fit the demands of the work role

- Satisfaction with Work Life
  - A measure of the respondent’s global cognitive judgments of satisfaction with his/her life

- Job Satisfaction
  - The respondent’s global level of satisfaction with his/her work life

- Burnout
  - A syndrome of emotional exhaustion, depersonalization, and reduced personal accomplishment that can occur among individuals who work with people in some capacity

A score 3 or lower is of concern – action should be considered.
A score above 3 – 4 is moderate.
A score above 4 is good and considered flourishing
In analyzing the qualitative responses to the surveys, we noted five reoccurring themes. Our report here is the pure, objective, grounded theory approach to analyzing the responses.

We leave it to further conversation between the Christian Reformed Church in North America leadership and our core team of researchers to implement positive changes that may lead to lasting positive change among Christian Reformed Church clergy and their families.
Research in Practice

What are some ways that church can support pastors and their families? While a church cannot suddenly change a salary, perhaps there are ways to inspire congregations to support pastors in qualitative or indirect ways, like buying groceries and making dinners. Money is a difficult subject, but plays a huge role in the effectiveness of a pastor.

“While we make enough for a living, we remain moderately concerned about our long-term financial situation since we can’t afford to buy a home and we worry we are not saving enough for retirement/old age.”

“The amount the congregation can afford to provide me as a monthly income places a great financial burden on myself and my family on a monthly bases. (Living expenses, insurance, mortgage, personal debt)”

“If I were the sole or primary breadwinner, finances would be a big stressor.”

“Current compensation could fulfill needs, but not in a life giving way that includes who God has created us to be. It could provide for the basics…but would demand significant sacrifice from us.”

THEME 1: Financial Strains

Many pastors who responded to the survey reported having suffered from financial strain or stress. This is often due to already existent financial stresses on the church as a whole, and is considered a problem by pastors only in so much as it prevents them from fulfilling their calling to the fullest.

What is the best way for a pastor to manage outside relationships?
Relationships are key to the occupation of a minister, but oftentimes a pastor’s personal life can become a hindrance to his/her vocational life. Is there a tangible way to separate these two “lives”?

“My income is okay but it helps to have a spouse who also has income. Our two adult children are having a hard time becoming independent, one of whom endured recent illness which adds stress and anxiety to my life.”

“Despite everything seemingly going well on the outside, and ministry being very successful, the stress of ministry and life leaves me often overwhelmed, anxious, and somewhat depressed. My personal relationships, including with God and with my spouse and children, suffer significantly because of this.”

“I’m a co-pastor with my wife, and that has its own particular challenges regarding work/home boundaries and, in our case, working more than we’re getting paid for.”

“There are several areas of stress for me – many of which overlap. There is martial stress – some of which is due to areas in life that we used to partner in but now do not. In the beginning, my wife was my church partner. That’s not longer the case. She no longer attends church. That’s created a distance that I can’t work through or get past.”

“My wife and I delayed having children due largely to my financial concerns. We have done a great job preparing for the future and I believe my income in ministry will rise, but right now we have gotten used to being dual income no kids and I worry a little bit about the adjustment of having a baby on the way as our income will be split in half when my wife stays home a few years.”
THEME 3: Calling

We have seen that all ministers feel “called” to their work in some way or another. Ministry is a vocation in the truest sense of the word. However, events often take place that cause pastors to question their calling, and whether they want to continue their work. This seems to be a natural, but temporary phase of thought in ministry work.

What causes a pastor to question his or her calling? Are there resources that can be provided to pastors to encourage them in their ministry and strengthen their sense of purpose?

“God has provided in a wonderful way. I have felt His presence, his guiding hand and strength granting me all that I stood/stand in need of each and every day. In looking back on these 25 plus years in fulltime church ministry I can truly say that I have been richly blessed and continue to enjoy working in parish ministry.”

“My work sometimes wearies me but I feel I’m doing what God has called me to and that often re-energizes me.”

“I certainly feel called to the work I do - and I truly love it - but pastoring a small church is a challenge. I am at the point in my calling where I think God is nudging me out of my comfort zone, but to leave my congregation now would probably mean its closing. That's a hard burden to bear and I'm not sure what to do with it.”
THEME 4: Congregation
The nature of a minister’s congregation plays a huge role in his or her sense of enjoyment, success, and potency. When a pastor has a good, strong relationship with his congregation, he feels a higher sense of job satisfaction than if he’s struggling to connect or provide for the congregation.

Research in Practice:
How can ministers in the Christian Reformed Church in North America better connect with their congregations? How can congregations forge better connections with their ministers?

“I love my work in ministry. I feel incredibly well supported by the congregation I serve (financially, spiritually, developmentally, etc.) This congregation goes out of its way to take care of its pastors and I’m incredibly thankful for that.”

“As a solo pastor of a fairly large rural congregation, I find it hard to live up to the expectations of the workaholic people I serve. I fail all the time because it seems the church sees me only as an employee.”

“I am very content serving in a wonderful church who accepts me as I am and allows me to be who I really am. I am supported and encouraged by godly elders. I am prayed for by the congregation on a constant basis.”

“The support and care that I receive from the current congregation that I serve has made an enormous difference in my wellbeing.”

“The congregation where I am on ministry staff journeyed with difficult conflict last year and many members left. The membership continues to decline. I enjoy the work and relationships of ministry I am a part of with pastoral care and education ministries.”
THEME 5: Stress and Mental Health
While mental health issues (e.g., depression, loneliness, isolation) do not apply to all pastors, we noted a recurring theme that the life of a pastor is difficult and it feels that there is sometimes nowhere to turn.

Research in Practice
Do pastors have access to mental health resources through the Christian Reformed Church in North America? If so, are there any factors that may inhibit a pastor or his/her spouse from accessing the resources?

“I struggle with seasonal depression in the winter months and it has been a long winter in the NW this year.”

“Just coming out of a two year battle with cancer. Currently in remission, but struggling to regain energy and healing.”

“I suffer with depression, ADHD, and a chronic neck/shoulder pain.” The problem with ministry is the sense that one can always do more, that the work is never done. It leads me to an unhealthy sense that I'm failing, when others probably sense otherwise.

“Overall I am very content in ministry and feel that this is what God has called and created me to do. However, the work is difficult and stressful, and it often leaves me feeling quite lonely.”
